This specific programme is designed for the development of low-cost, high-performance mobile communication systems.
It contributes to the socioeconomic development of the Community, to the reduction of regional and urban/rural economic disparities, to the proper functioning of the single European market and to the competitiveness of the European Economy. In addition, it also promotes collaboration between operators in the different sectors and thus improves the quality of communication services, information security and reliability; it strengthens the international competitiveness of the Community's telecommunications industry; it will enable the European operators to meet the new challenges in technologies and services under the best possible conditions; it will allow service providers to improve their cost/benefit ratio and to introduce new or enhanced information services which will both increase revenue and give indispensable support to other Community production sectors; it will create an environment conducive to technical competition and allow services and telecommunications users (individual and corporate) to experiment with certain advanced communications; it will pave the way for the development, implementation and acceptance of international standards.
The work focuses on intelligent network developments, image communications, new generations of mobile communications, information safety and application experiments. The objective of these experiments is to establish the feasibility of applications of advanced communication technologies.

Free movement of people, goods and services in Europe after 1992 will only be possible if a wide range of services are available where and when required. Public services and administrations, as well as most major businesses, will need to be able to operate effectively across national boundaries. Cheap and efficient trans-European communication services are therefore crucial to Europe's social and economic development. Infrastructures for information and data exchange must be quickly brought up to the level needed to meet this challenge. For this, research and technological development projects must be launched right away in order to identify requirements, reach a consensus on common data exchange protocols and procedures and ensure that the right technologies are available.
Measures will be undertaken in the public administration, transport, health care, flexible training and correspondence courses, libraries and linguistic sectors as well as rural areas.
This appropriation is intended to cover staff expenditure in respect of 106 staff (57 A, 17 B and 32 C).

B6-6311	Council Decision 92/217/EEC of 16 March 1992 adopting a specific research and technological development programme in the field of human capital and mobility (1990 to 1994) (OJ No L 107, 24. 4. 1992, p. 1). This specific programme is designed to contribute to increasing the human resources in research and technological development which the Member States are going to need in the next decade and to optimize the use of Member States' scientific and technical infrastructures while assisting in the creation of a real European scientific and technical Community. Researchers from the countries of Central and Eastern Europe and the Soviet Republics will be associated with the programme. More specifically, the aim is to make it possible, in the five years of the programme, to train or develop the scientific and technical knowledge and skills of about 5 000 European researchers. This programme (training for research by research, developing and supporting intra-European networks and promoting access to large-scale facilities) covers the following areas : — exact and natural sciences at the level of basic research, — applied research and technological development, — human and social sciences of relevance to socio-economic development, — the interfaces between the basic sciences and technological applications. The actions are essentially to do with the training of young people beginning careers in research and technological development (in particular at the doctoral and postdoctoral level) and may also concern other personnel at times when they have to acquire new specializations, such as when retraining becomes necessary in order to adapt to the rapid advance of science and technology, and in the exchanges and cooperation which they have to maintain on a permanent basis. Research will be undertaken in two areas : — in relation to disadvantaged groups in European society (the handicapped, the elderly, etc.), — ways of improving mobility, with lower speeds and over shorter distances. This appropriation is intended to cover expenditure in respect of 14 staff (seven A, two B and five C) currently blocked in the establishment plan until the legal base is adopted.

Article 374 of the Act of Accession provides that during the transitional period (1986 to 1991) a decreasing proportion of the VAT own resources or of the gross national product based financial contributions paid by Portugal into the general budget, but not including its share in financing the United Kingdom's rebate, shall be refunded. With effect from 1988, Portugal also receives a refund of a proportion of its payments in respect of the additional resource and its share in financing the United Kingdom's rebate. With a view to an individual correction of the VAT and GNP bases for 1988 to 1990 concerning the inclusion of the Azores and Madeira, which occurs and gives rise to refunds, the refund appropriations for Portugal have been increased.
